U. N. BODY REJECTS PLAN FOR STATELESS

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LAKE SUCCESS, N. Y., June 4—By a 9-to-3 vote, the United Nations Human Rights Commission rejected today a French move to make the fate of all stateless persons the direct concern of the international organization.

In another day of line-by-line debate, the commission moved near the half-way mark in its consideration of the proposed international declaration of human rights. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, United States delegate and commission chairman, told the representatives that they would have to wind up their work by June 18.

The decision against the French move to write the issue of statelessness into the declaration came during the discussion on guarantees of the rights of nationality. Speaking for France, Prof. René Cassin said that any declaration must specifically state the duty of the United Nations to prevent statelessness and to extend protection to all persons not guarded by any governments.

Professor Cassin was backed fully by spokesmen for the International Refugee Organization and the American Federation of Labor and in part by the delegates of Lebanon and Egypt. The opposition, which included the United States, Britain, Russia, India and China, said the declaration could not go so far.

The commission also debated the problem of guarantees of religious worship. Prof. A. P. Pavlov, Russian delegate, insisted that freedom of thought was as important. Without it, he said, there could be no guarantee that atheists would have the same rights of expression as believers.
