army train near Quantara, on the Suez Canal today, injuring four British soldiers. A fierce gun battle followed and one Egyptian was killed.

It was the first outbreak of violence in the Suez area since the Friday battle that caused Saturday's bloody rioting in Cairo. The Cairo rioters were inflamed by a Suez clash of British and Egyptian auxiliary police in which more than forty Egyptians were killed.

The new outbreak was signalled by an explosion under the first two leading escort cars preceding the engine of the British train. After the explosion of the mine, British troops riding an escort car opened fire, killing the Egyptian and possibly wounding four more.
