LONDON, Feb. 8 — All of the European continent's reigning monarchs, of whom there are only six left, will come here next week for the funeral of their friend and cousin, King George VI.

Although wars and revolutions have depopulated many thrones since 1936, there will be more crowned heads in the funeral procession next Friday than there were at the obsequies for George V sixteen years ago. Five attended those ceremonies.

Today there are in the world only fourteen rulers who bear the title of King or Queen. Half of these will be here, the seventh being King Feisal of Iraq who is 16 years old and a student at Harrow School on the outskirts of London.

Juliana to Attend

The others will be King Haakon of Norway, King Gustaf Adolf of Sweden, King Frederick of Denmark, King Baudouin of Belgium, King Paul of Greece and Queen Juliana of the Netherlands.

In addition, Prince Felix of Luxembourg, consort of the Grand Duchess Charlotte, the duchy's ruler, will attend as will several other princes and consorts.

Despite the current disagreement between the two countries, King Farouk is sending his cousin, Prince Abdel Moneim, the third in succession to the throne of Egypt, to Britain for the funeral. Two weeks of court mourning have been ordered in Egypt.

In addition to royalty, there will be several chiefs of state or chiefs of government among the mourners. They include Prime Minister Sidney G. Holland of New Zealand, President Vincent Auriol of France, President Luigi Einaudi of Italy, President Ivan Ribar of Yugoslavia and Chancellor Konrad Adenauer of the West German Republic.

Acheson There for Truman

One man that London would particularly like to see, President Truman, will not be coming but will be represented by Secretary of State Dean Acheson.

The only one of the continental Kings who was here as a sovereign sixteen years ago for the funeral of George V is the 80-year-old King of Norway, who is said to be insisting upon coming despite the discussion of his family and advisers. He is of the same generation as the King's mother, Queen Mary, now approaching 85, who was reported today to be deeply saddened by her son's death but in good health and not bowed down by her sorrow.

In her first message to Parliament today the new Queen Elizabeth invited the Lords and Commons to attend the lying-in-state of her late father in Westminster Hall on Monday. On the following three days the Hall will be open to the public.

On Monday the two houses will receive from the Queen a more formal message on the death of the King and a ceremonious reply of sympathy and condolence will be made by the legislators.

In both houses, several messages of sympathy from the parliaments of other lands were read.
