EGYPTIANS DISPUTE BRITISH ON MOSLEMS

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

CAIRO, Jan. 17—Egypt's Revolution Council disputed tonight the British Embassy's version of contacts between British diplomats and leaders of the dissolved Moslem Brotherhood of fanatical fundamentalists.

The communiqué issued by the Military Junta early Friday, indicting and ending the Brotherhood for plotting against the Government of Gen. Mohammed Naguib, charged that British Minister Michael J. Cresswell and Trefor Evans, an embassy counselor, had held secret talks with representatives of the banned organization.

A British Embassy spokesman later denied flatly that Mr. Cresswell had met any of the Brotherhood. The spokesman declared that Mr. Evans' contacts were in the normal line of his work and that he (Evans) had, in fact, informed members of the Revolution Council of them. All this, the Revolution Council, in its reply tonight, denied.

Meanwhile, the regime continued mop-up action against the Brotherhood. It announced the seizure of a large cache of arms and explosives on a farm belonging to Hassan el Ashmawi, one of the Brotherhoods' arrested leaders.
