Tear Gas Used To Break Up Cairo Riot
The Washington Post and Times Herald (1954-1959); Apr 4, 1954; ProQuest Historical Newspapers The Washington Post
pg. M8

Tear Gas Used To Break Up Cairo Riot

CAIRO, April 3 (AP).—Police arrested approximately 50 students today in breaking up demonstrations against Egypt's military government.

Tear gas bombs were used to disperse hundreds of students who shouted demands for return of parliamentary elections.

Police resorted to tear gas when the students hurled rocks at them in a demonstration at Abbassia Technical School in a Cairo suburb. The students were prevented from marching into the heart of the city.

The Revolutionary Council—the group of young army officers who rule Egypt—met to consider means of restraining student outbursts.

President Mohamed Naguib was not present. He has been bedridden since last Monday. His doctors said he would not be able to resume his duties for another week.

Thus far the military regime has taken no drastic action against the students, who make up a large segment of Egypt's intelligentsia. They have been making persistent demands that the government schedule elections for a constituent assembly as promised earlier by Naguib. The revolutionary council overrode Naguib and called off the elections.

Informants said the revolutionary council was preparing to crack down harder on the students.

The council also was considering whether to declare strikes illegal. This would be aimed at deterring any attempt to stage strikes similar to those which crippled Egypt last weekend. Transport facilities were affected and shops, public places and offices closed.

Reproduced with permission of the copyright owner. Further reproduction prohibited without permission.