Naguib Under Treatment; Swears in Nasser as Premier

Associated Press

Maj. Gen. Mohammed Naguib, President of Egypt, talked with doctors as he received X-ray treatment at Military Hospital in Cairo on Thursday. General relinquished post as Premier.

Special to The New York Times.

CAIRO, April 18—Maj. Gen. Mohammed Naguib, Egypt's President, administered the oath of office today to Lieut. Col. Gamal Abdel Nasser, his successsor as Premier, and to the reshuffled Cabinet, announced early this morning.

Nine military men and twelve civilians went to the Republican Palace shortly before noon for the installation ceremony. Maj. Salah Salem, Minister of National Guidance and Sudanese Affairs, and three of the civilian ministers lunched with the President in his home and then rejoined their Cabinet colleagues this evening to discuss routine affairs.

General Naguib, who had sought to hasten the end of the military regime and restore civilian political life, was outmaneuvered by Colonel Nasser in the course of a crisis late in March. While the President was confined at home following a physical collapse, Colonel Nasser was busy consolidating the victory he had won with the support of the Army and urban workers. He has deprived most party politicians of the last ten-year period of their political rights for the next ten years and has begun a purge of publishers and journalists accused of corrupt practices.

General Naguib, who has made no comment on his surrender of the Premiership, was twice defeated by Colonel Nasser in two months of political warfare. Apparently he now is content to return to his original role of "public relations man" for the ruling Revolution Command Council. He is under medical treatment.
