NARRIMAN TO WED AGAIN

Former Egyptian Queen Will Become Bride of Surgeon

Special to The New York Times.

CAIRO, April 29—Egypt's former Queen Narriman, divorced wife of exiled King Farouk, has revealed plans to marry the son of a man who was one of the closest associates of her first husband.

The 20-year-old former Queen obtained permission yesterday from Egypt's Court of Personal Status to wed Dr. Adham el-Nakeeb, 27-year-old Alexandria surgeon. The court had to be consulted because Narriman still is a minor. No date for the wedding was announced.

The prospective bridegroom is the Cambridge-educated son of Dr. Ahmed el-Nakeeb, who was one of the inner circle of the former royal court. He was sentenced last year to serve fifteen years in prison by a revolutionary tribunal that found him guilty of "corrupting former King Farouk and Egyptian political life."

He was committed to prison but subsequently was transferred to a hospital for medical treatment.
