New 5-Man Board to Try 50 Charged With Disturbances

Special to The New York Times.

CAIRO, May 24—The Revolution Command Council, Egypt's ruling army junta, announced early today the establishment of a special five-man tribunal to try more than fifty persons accused of planning May Day bombings and other disturbances.

The new panel was described as a "new chamber" of the revolution tribunal which has been conducting political trials since its formation Sept. 16.

The revolution tribunal, composed of three junta officers, has been trying former civilian political leaders, journalists and others on charges of corruption, treason and subversion usually based on alleged acts committed under the old monarchial regime.
