NINE OFFICERS JAILED FOR 'PLOT' IN EGYPT

Special to The New York Times.

CAIRO, June 22—Nine Army officers were sentenced today to prison terms of up to fifteen years by the ruling Junta's Revolution Tribunal after conviction on charges of mutinous conspiracy against the regime. Three other officers were acquitted, two received suspended sentences and two were cashiered from service.

All the convicted officers but one were members of the Cavalry Corps, which supported President Mohammed Naguib four months ago in his losing struggle for power with Premier Gamal Abdel Nasser. They were arrested April 28 and went on trial June 5.

The often sensational testimony in the ten-day trial implicated General Naguib and served to discredit him further as the figurehead President. He had been a national hero and was regarded as the personification of the revolutionary Army group that overthrew the monarchy two years ago. A top official said that General Naguib had not inspired the conspiracy but had been aware of what "those boys" in the Cavalry Corps were planning.

The sentences were regarded in some circles as an example of continued restraint with which the Army group has been governing Egypt. Only the leader of the conspiracy, Capt. Ahmed Aly al-Misry, was sentenced to fifteen years. The rest of the sentences ranged from one to ten years. The prosecutor had demanded death for all the accused.
