Egypt-Iraq Dispute Aired
Special to The New York Times.
New York Times (1857-Current file); Jan 28, 1955; ProQuest Historical Newspapers The New York Times (1851 - 2002) pg. 6

Egypt-Iraq Dispute Aired

Special to The New York Times.

CAIRO, Jan. 27—The conflicting views of Egypt and Iraq on the latter's agreement to join in a defense pact with Turkey were aired for the first time today in what was reported to have been a stormy session of the conference of Arab leaders here.

Dr. Fadhil el Jamali, former Iraqi Premier and now a member of Parliament deputizing for ailing Gen. Nuri As-Said, the present Premier, met with the Premiers of Egypt, Lebanon, Syria, Jordan and Saudi Arabia to explain his Government's position on the projected Ankara-Baghdad link. Since Saturday the Premiers of the other countries have been studying the implications of the pact and the Egyptian arguments that it represented a break in Arab unity and a violation of the pledge to refrain from alliances outside the Arab League.

According to Egyptian sources, the morning session was devoted to the exposition of the Iraqi views by Mr. Jamali. No details were available but it was a reasonable assumption that the Iraqi representative reiterated the conviction expressed by Nuri as-Said that Iraq felt the need to take practical steps to bolster her position in view of the proximity of the Soviet Union.

Following the main conference the Iraqi delegation met privately with the Egyptian Premier, Lieut. Col. Gamal Abdel Nasser, Maj. Salah Salem, Minister of National Guidance, (propaganda). The Egyptians were reported to have sought to impress the Iraqis with the danger of a split in the Arab League presented by a rapprochement with Turkey and with the allegedlyhostile public reaction to the new pact in the Arab countries.

The discussions grew heated in the evening session, lasting three and a half hours, during which the loud and angry voice of Major Salem was heard in the antechamber to the closed meeting room. Later it was reported that Major Salem had accused the Iraqis of withholding certain secret clauses of the agreement.

Reproduced with permission of the copyright owner. Further reproduction prohibited without permission.