'Impractical,' British Say

Special to The New York Times.

LONDON, March 21—British Government officials indicated today that the Egyptian proposal on the Negev was "impractical" and could not expect British support.

One highly competent diplmomatic source disclosed that Egypt had suggested privately in recent months that her ban on Israeli shipping through the Suez Canal might be lifted in return for Israeli cooperation over the Negev. The Israeli Government is understood to have rejected such an arrangement.
